Winter whips in, takes two lives

Two people were killed yesterday as plunging temperatures, winds buffeting up to 80-90 kph, sandstorms in the Negev and drenching rain in many other parts of the country, broke the unseasonably warm and dry weather of the past few weeks. After a number of false starts. winter really seemed to have finally

As fierce winds whipped up Negev sandstorms that cut visibility to only two metres in some areas, in the northern Negev town of Netivot the winds brought death. Razuk Ramadan Shahza, 28, of Gaza, a building worker, was killed when a breezeblock wall he and a fellowworker had just finished building also from Gaza, was hospitalized in Beersheba with leg injuries. In Netanya, a woman was killed when a severed power line fell on her. A UN truck was washed into the sea, but its soldier passengers reached the shore unharmed.

Tree branches blown on to the roads by the strong winds caused some slight traffic hold-ups, and there were also a number of electricity cuts throughout the region. Galilee farmers welcomed the

A number of trees came down in the middle of Jerusalem street intersections as the storm grew in force towards evening. Before the rain began to fall in earnest, high winds whirled dust through the air. Damped down by the drizzle of the afternoon, the dust turned the capital's roads into slick slides, and police were out in force to keep traffic moving smoothly. Some neighbourhoods suffered brief power-cuts.

Yesterday's winds came as a low over Cyprus moved into our area, and the drop in temperatures, down by as much as five degrees inland as compared with Tuesday, resulted from a flow of cold air moving in from Turkey, meteorologists said vesterday.

However, to placate some of the Liberal stalwarts, Section 4, which permits abortions if the pregnancy endangers the mother's physical or psychological health, be expanded to state that abortions would also be allowed if pregnancy under certain family and social circumstances imperil the mother's well-being.

The feeling among the Aguda MKs is that this would make approval for a legal abortion somewhat harder to come by, as proof of danger to the mother's health would have to be offered. Halacha does prefer the mother's to the embryo's life.

However, the final word will rest with the two rabbis who hold sway in the Aguda's Council of Sages - the supreme authority for the party.

At the Law Committee session yestsrday, Prof. Ezra Spicehandler of the Hebrew Union College (Reform) attested that the proposed amendment — inserting the words "according to Halacha" in the definition of conversion in the Law of Return - would "cause divisionswithin the Jewish people." Spicehandler is the first of several expert witnesses, representing the various streams in Judaism, whom Glass has asked to testify before the committee.

Military c'tee begins hearing Shak'a case

A three-man military government advisory committee yesterday began hearing an appeal by Nablus Mayor Bassam Shak'a against his threatened banishment from the West Bank. The committee, which convened in Ramle jail at 4 p.m., and deliberated for over 7 hours, is expected to complete its work by this afternoon, and then Judea and Samaria commander Tat-Aluf Binyamin Ben-Eliezer will advise Defence Minister Ezer Weizman whether to expel Shak'a or not.

The body was appointed after the High Court of Justice last week refused to hear the mayor's appeal against banishment until all normal legal channels had been exhausted. If the military authorities reject Shak'a's appeal then he has three days in which to return to the High

At 3 p.m. a delegation of women from Nablus and elsewhere in the West Bank arrived outside the bleak, heavily guarded jail, together with Shak'a's wife Aynaya, who has been on hunger strike for five days in solidarity with her husband.

A number of mayors also arrived in a convoy of cars and buses and took shelter from the heavy rain under a metal-roofed shed at the entrance. Halhoul mayor Mohammad Milhem told reporters that they had come 'to show the world that the jailing is unjust.'

Karim Khalaf of Ramallah asked that the mayors be permitted to meet Shak'a to ask him to end his fortnight-old hunger strike, but the prison governor said the Nablus mayor was receiving all necessary treatment and that he would convey the good wishes of his colleagues.

Attorney Felicia Langer, who has been representing Shak's since his detention on November 11, said on arrival that she hoped that "reason would triumph.'

Teachers' wage talks flop; sanctions seen

By ALAN ELSNER Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. - A confrontation between the government and the country's two teachers' unions yesterday appeared almost inevitable following the breakdown of negotiations over a new wage agreement on Tuesday night.

The Histadrut Teachers Union. which represents all elementary and kindergarten teachers and a large number of junior high school teachers, immediately announced that it would begin sanctions on the day that the Etzioni report on the status and working conditions of teachers is published. The union committed itself, some six weeks ago, to preserve industrial calm until the report's publication.

Moshe Etzioni, chairman of the committee which examined the position of teachers, told The Jerusalem Post last night that a final date of December 10 has been set for the publication of his committee's

The situation is further complicated by the fact that the union has already threatened to begin sanctions on December 3 over a separate issue: the teachers have t been paid proper salaries for the past two months because of sanctions imposed by workers in the Education Ministry payroll department. These workers were forced to abandon their sanctions when the ministry served them back-to-work orders some three weeks ago, but the ministry still does not know if normal salaries will be paid to the teachers next week.

A mood of militancy has caught hold of the teachers, whose salaries have fallen far behind the inflation of recent months. "We are determined to hold a strike to improve our position and it doesn't bother us over which issue the strike finally blows up," one teacher said.

The negotiations broke down on Tuesday evening when the government rejected the teacher's claim for wage parity with state-employed engineers. The engineers received pay increases last July of 20-30 per cent, in the form of two special bonuses. The government is now refusing to grant these bonuses to the teachers

A Histadrut Teachers Unlon source said that the government has hardened its position since Yigaei Hurvitz became finance minister. 'Previously, Education Minister Zevulun Hammer was inclined to support our demands. Now, Hurvitz has convinced him to oppose them," the source said.

A more moderate reaction came yesterday from Benyamin Veller. Teachers Association. He said that his association would demand to reopen wage negotiations with the government on the basis of the Et-zioni recommendations once they

Begin: No promises on Jerusalem stadium

By ROBERT ROSENBERG Jerusalem Post Reporter

Citing the ailing state of the economy, Prime Minister Menahem Begin yesterday refused to commit the government to participating in a IL1.4b. Jerusalem sports stadium complex, and passed the proposal on to Finance Minister Yigael Hurvitz. Meeting with Jerusalem Mayor Teddy Kollek and Interior Ministry experts who prepared a report recommending that the planned sports complex be moved from Shuafat to the Givat Homa area north of Bethlehem, Begin noted that while hospital and school construction was frozen, the only recommendation that "appeared reasonable" was the immediate repair of the city's existing sports facilities. The report also recommended spending IL250m, for such immediate repairs.

The report was commissioned after Begin sent Deputy Minister Yoram Aridor into the conflict between the city, which is adamant about construction of a new sports complex, and religious opponents to the stadium, who have combined violence with charges that the sports facility would desecrate the sabbath and introduce "Hellenism" into the meeting, negotiated a moratorium on construction at Shuafat, where IL30m. has already been spent on infrastructure work, in exchange for the preparation of a report on alternatives to Shuafat. The city has indicated it will follow the recommendations of the Interior Ministry, but it wants the government to join in funding the IL1.4b.

Interior Ministry director-general Haim Kubersky, who also took part in yesterday's meeting, is firmly behind the recommendation. He said yesterday that IL80m. a year for the next three to four years was the only immediate expenditure to be expected, since it would take that long for architects and engineers to redesign a stadium for Givat Homa. The city has been raising money abroad for the project. If the government decides to ratify the move to Givat Homa to satisfy religious opponents to the Shuafat site, the city wants to be reimbursed for the money already spent at Shuafat.

The two existing football grounds have severely limited seating capacities are in residential neighbourhoods where there are serious traffic problems on days when games are played, and offer few up-to-date facilities.

Shilo settlers suspected of damaging W. Bank school

By IAN BLACK Jerusalem Post Beporter

The Judea district police yesterday arrested three young Israelis from the West Bank settlement at Shilo on suspicion of causing serious damage at an Arab school after pupils threw stones at their vehicles. Sgan-Nitzav Avraham Sastiel, the area police commander, told The Jerusalem Post that one of the three had given a full statement about the ent, which occurred on Tuesday, and had been released on bail. Two others had refused to cooperate. and were being detained, he said. Sastiel said that another three men from Shilo. also believed to have participated in the attack on the girls' secondary school at Jalazoun refugee camp, north of Ramaliah, would be called in for questioning to-

The police commander also said that the men had surrendered an Uzi sub-machinegun, which had been used to fire about three warning shots into the air.

The incident began when girls from the school threw stones at two Israeli vehicles travelling on the Ramallah-Nablus road on Tuesday morning. The settlers say that they remained outside the school premises but the headmistress has claimed that they smashed windows and laboratory equipment.

Sastiel said that police were also trying to locate the girls who began the incident, "but this is much more difficult."

In another incident yesterday, a woman settler from Ofra found her car tires alight near Beit El after driving through a roadblock of burning tires. Police and security forces are investigating that incident

Ramot residents reject deal to hide road from zealots

By ROBERT BOSENBERG

Jerusalem Post Reporter Interior Minister Yosef Burg met this week with religious leaders and City Hall officials to hammer out an agreement on preventing sabbath violence on Jerusalem's Ramot road. But a leading spokesman for the Ramot neighbourhood council said last night that the compromise Burg reached is unacceptable to the residents of the northern suburb. He added that Burg had not met with the Ramot residents.

A spokesman for the Interior Ministry said that Burg had gained religious zealots' approval for the construction of a wall that would hide one lane of the road from the eyes of the religious residents of Kiryat Zanz. Traffic to the suburb would travel on the old road to Ramot, and traffic to the city from the suburb would use the new, fourlane highway.

But Yossi Yedid, a spokesman for the Ramot council, said the Ramot residents have long since rejected that proposal.

"First of all, the old road is unsafe even Mayor Teddy Kollek's committee of experts says that. Second given the state of the economy, we don't want to be part of a plan that would be a waste of millions of pounds. And third — and this is the most important — this compromise is a surrender to terrorism," Yedid said last night, when he heard of the reported compromise.

The Burg compromise was first proposed last month to the Ramot neighbourhood council, and the residents then rejected it, citing the same reasons Yedid gave last night. The city is asking the government to fund the new wall, which municipal spokesman Rafi Davara said would be made of stone and shaped in terraces to give a gardenlike appearance on both sides. Davara discounted reports the wall would cost between ILsm. and

Ban on advance ires El Al ground crews

By MICHAL YUDELMAN Jerusalem Post Reporter

El Al ground staff works committees vesterday asked the Histadrut to declare a labour dispute in the company immediately. This call follows the management's decision to renege on Tuesday's agreement to pay the workers a sum equivalent to their salaries on December 15.

The workers wanted the payment to be officially listed as an advance on the new wage agreement, which the management is due to sign on December 31. But the chairman of El Al's board of directors, Avraham Shavit, said he could not pay an advance on an agreement he had not yet signed, and that the payment was December's salary, given on December 15 instead of at the end of the month.

When Shavit read yesterday's headlines announcing that El Al would pay ground workers an ad-vance on their wage agreement and that he had surrendered to the workers' demands, he was inclous, and told the acting chairman of the Histadrut's Trades Union Department, Rehavia Ofek, who had proposed the early payment, that the

which are sparked by rumour. Thus trading bonds early is like "breaking" a savings plan and loaing some of the interest: bond rates don't exactly keep up with the rate of inflation, so the bonds investor loses in real terms, but is also protected against a sudden drop in value in the long term, since companies and pension funds continue to buy bonds. At a certain point when the market drops it is more worthwhile for companies and pension funds to buy bonds already on the market than those sold them by the Bank of Israel at a lower rate than to the general

Chagall medallion sales far better than reported

By JUDY SIEGEL

Jerusalem Post Reporter Korat Gag, the controversial Ottoman society set up with govern-ment endorsement to sell Chagali medallions to help fund the building of young couples' housing, has sold 350 of the 12,000 gold medallions-and 150 of the 12,000 silver ones since the campaign opened at the Knesset almost a month ago.

Moshe Neudorfer, general manager of the Barclays-Discount Bank, told The Jerusalem Post last night that there was no truth in claims by Mapam MK Imri Ron and some newspapers that only 30 have been sold so far. Barclays, which was contracted to buy the gold for Korat Gag and to distribute the medallions to other banks and to purchasers, is holding thousands of the medallions in its vaults. It intends to launch a strong advertising campaign, together with Korat Gag, to promote interest among the public here and abroad. Neudorfer, formerly director of the State Revenue Administration. also denied Ron's claim that the medallions were minted by a firm owned by industrialist Meir Halevy. a friend of Prime Minister Menahem Begin, who initiated the scheme, and that the ton of gold was extracted from a South African gold mine allegedly owned by Nessim Gaon, another Begin friend and board chairman of Korat Gag. "The medallions were minted by

Argo, a subsidiary of the Union Bank of Switzerland, and the gold was purchased from the Union Bank of Switzerland." Neudorfer said. Yehiel Kadishai, head of Begin's oureau and of Korat Gag, told The Post that Gaon owns no gold mines

Kadishai admitted that he was disappointed by sales so far (Gaon had told The Post, at a ceremony launching the sales, that he hoped all 24,000 would be snatched up by the end of December).

The State Comptroller's Office spokesman told The Post that three of its auditors are busy with an intensive study of Korat Gag, as requested by Kadishai, since three rooms in the Prime Minister's Office are being used as the society's headquarters.

Pope arrives in Turkey defying threats to life against his life and critical editorials on his visit. Pope John Paul II arrived in Turkey yesterday, commenting that "love is greater than danger."

He was greeted at Ankara's Esenboga airport by President Fahri Koruturk, Premier Suleyman Demirel and Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen.

As he stepped off his special Alitalia jetliner from Rome, the pope kissed the red carpet that led from the plane's ramp to a military honour guard.

"It is necessary I go there now," he told journalists on his flight from Rome to Ankara. "I must come for ecumenical reasons," he added in a reference to his meeting today with the spiritual leader of the world's 200 million Orthodox, Patriarch Demetrius I.

A 21-gun salvo was fired as the pope listened to the Turkish national anthem side by side with Koruturk on a special platform.

American intelligence sources on Tuesday said the military options open to Carter were restricted. They said there was no way the U.S. could attempt a rescue of the hostages without putting their lives in even greater jeopardy.

But even if the hostages were harmed, retaliatory strikes would be limited to strictly military targets, they added. The sources said punitive air strikes aimed at destroying Iran's air force on the ground remain a real possibility if the situation worsens:

Iran has 77 highly-sophisticated U.S.-built F-14s, supplied when the shah was in power.

Shortfall forces cuts in Soviet economic plan

MOSCOW. - The Soviet Union yesterday issued one of its bleakest annual economic reports since World War II and scaled down its plans for growth in 1980.

Figures presented at a session of the Supreme Soviet (parliament) showed that basic production targets for the current five-year plan, due to end next year, would not be met. The session was attended by President Leonid Brezhnev, who on Tuesday sharply criticized the performance of the economy in a speech to the policy-making Communist Party Central Committee.

Brezhnev, 72, also criticized several ministers and disclosed a slump in the Soviet grain harvest to 179 million tons from a record 287 million last year. Prime Minister Alexei Kosygin, who is basically responsible for the economy, was absent from the Kremlin and a seat was left empty in Among the figures announced in the annual plan and budget was a cut

UK plan will result in chaos

SALISBURY, - A Patriotic Front spokesman yesterday accused Britain of trying to ram through a truce agreement plagued with the seeds of chaos and civil war.

In Parliament, formal debate opened on the British proposed con-stitution endorsed by Zimbabwe Rhodesian Prime Minister Bishop Abel Musorewa. Quick passage was expected despite the virulent opposition from right-wingers among the minority white members, who described the document as a "betrayal."

Patriotic Front spokesman Cephas Maipa, who formally met with the press for the first time since returning from exile, voiced misgivings about the cease-fire being hammered out at the negotiating table in London by British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington.

"Lord Carrington, through the connivance of Bishop Musorewa, wants to stampede the Patriotic Front into the sort of treacherous cease-fire into which are built-in disruptive mechanisms to ensure that into chaos after the departure of the British governor." he said. "This is what the South African government is waiting and praying for. We have not driven out one imperialist in order to receive a new and more oppressive imperialist in the form of apartheid South Africs."

However, Msipa also said that guerilla leaders Joshua Nkomo and Robert Mugabe will form an alliance in elections to lead the nation.

Nkomo and Mugabe are presently in London for the British-sponso peace talks aimed at ending the even-year guerrilla war. Meanwhile, South African Foreign

Until 1978 the two countries had close military ties, but North Yemen received extensive U.S. military aid earlier this year after it claimed an

Scandais involving Brown's appointees to the bench have become a major political embarrassment for the 41-year-old governor, raising questions about his judgment just as he launches his presidential bid.

In recent weeks, Californians have seen one judge "busted" for possession of 328 marijuana plants, another under investigation for alleged ties to the "Mexican Mafia," a third accused of making obscene phone calls, a fourth of passing bad cheques, an unprecedented 10 Brown nominees for judicial office rejected by voters, and the state supreme court thrown into disarray by a bitter feud whirling around Brown's chief justice, Rose Bird.

WHEN BROWN, himself a lawyer, won re-election a year ago, he set out to administer a sharp joit to California's stuffy, white, male-dominated legal establishment.

First, the legal community's feathers were ruffled by the selection of his friend, Miss Bird, a lawyer with no prior appeals court experience, as the state's first chief justice. Then scores of blacks, Hispanics, and liberal, if relatively inexperienced lawyers of the American Civil Liberties Union were Most controversial was Brown's appointment last month of gay rights activist Steven Sachs, who had previously served only as a juvenile court commissioner, to the Los Angeles Superior Court. Sachs, 39, became the nation's first openly homosexual judge.

Among Brown's civil libertles judges was Paul Halvonik, 40, appointed despite a 1974 brush with the law over marijuana possession. A single cigarette was involved. No charges were brought, But earlier this month, Judge Halvonik had serious pot problems. He pleaded not guilty to charges of cultivating 323 pot plants in his Oakland home. Police say they were discovered when officers responded to a burglary call.

offered to her husband. "Blatant sexism," sniffed Mrs. Halvonik, also a practising attorney. "I don't want to be taught how to be a faithful wife." Judge Halvonik didn't improve matters by pronouncing possession to be "a minor violation of no greater concern to me than serving wine to a 19-year-old for dinner.

OF GRAVER IMPORT in the legal community is the storm over Justice Bird. She and her allies in the supreme court were charged with deliberately withholding controverslal, liberalizing decisions until after election day last year to ensure her confirmation in office. But that verdict, reached in secret and with no explanation to the public, has failed to clear the air.

Conservative judges complain that the supreme court, in the months of in-fighting among Reagan- and Brown-appointed judges, has become a target of national ridicule.

War by famine

A DELIBERATE policy of crop destruction by Indonesia has created a famine in East Timor comparable to the more notorious disasters in Biafra and Kampuchea.

Evidence built up by the Inter-national Red Cross and by Father Leonato do Rego, a Catholic priest long resident in East Timor. suggests that as many as 200,000 people have died from starvation out of a population of 650,000.

Indonesia's Vice-President Adam Malik says "only" 50,000 to 80,000 have died, and adds: "It is war. What is the big fuss?"

East Timor, a former Portugues colony, was declared independent by Fretelin (the Revolutionary Front of Independent East Timor) in

This proclamation frustrated Indonesian take-over plans and within weeks Jakarta announced that 'volunteers'' from Indonesian West Timor had invaded its unruly neighbour to save it from a Communist take-over.

Excluded from East Timor since late 1975, the International Red Cross was recently allowed to return to oversee a relief programme. Its latest reports reveal 13 Indonesian refugee centres holding 75,000 inmates, 60,000 of them starving, with 20,000 beyond help. Such reports confirm an allegation

By JONATHAN MIRSKY London

in October, 1977, by a Catholic priest in East Timor that "a barbarous genocide of innocent people goes on, apparently with complete peace of conscience... East Timor is being wiped out by an invasion, a brutal conquest that produces beaps of dead, maimed, and orphaned."

DESPITE the admission of deaths by Vice-President Malik, Indonesia's President Suharto has sought to minimize the East Timor affair, claiming that his troops encountered meagre resistance, so welcome were the anti-Fretelin

This is contradicted by Father do Rego, who says that opposition to the invasion was wide and deep. Starvation, he maintains, became inevitable as the people, fleeing before Indonesian units, abandoned their crops, which were then either set alight or destroyed from the air.

Indonesia, as a leading member of ASEAN, the Association of South-East Asian Nations (together with Thailand, Malaysia, Singapore, and the Philippines), has received military hardware from the U.S., Britain, France, the Netherlands, Sweden and West Germany.

Reports that American arms were used during the East Timor invasion atimulated hearings in the U.S. Senate. Senators held it improper under the arms sales agreement for Indonesia to use American weapons when attacking a foreign country. Jakarta reiterated that the invading forces were volunteers.

Once East Timor was annexed, this subterfuge became unnecessary and Indonesian troops now openly maintain order, although pockets of Fretelin supporters, said to be numbered in hundreds, maintain resistance.

Despite some embarrassment, Washington continues to value its ally as a bulwark against Russian and Vietnamese intentions in South-East Asia.

Such strategic considerations do not obscure international criticism of Suharto's regime. The UN Commission on Human Rights has placed Indonesia in the same league as Ethiopia, Paraguay and Uganda. Amnesty International suggests the existence of 100,000 political prisoners. Jakarta asserts only 80,-000 have been detained, and that most have been released. However, it appears that many have merely been shifted to other camps or remain under strict surveillance.

exits of the Kola Peninsula" (the other being north Norway). Murmansk, the peninsula's main port, is Russia's only ice-free port with direct access to the Atlantic and is the base for the biggest and most important fleet, the Northern Fleet, which includes some 70 major ships and 170 submarines, 100 of which are nuclear-powered. The Svalbard-Norway sea-gate which narrows in winter when the pack-ice line moves south) would play a crucial role in wartime. Soviet units would sail through it to launch amphibious attacks on north Norway, to interrupt American supplies to Europe, and to fire missiles at U.S. cities and bases.

NATO submarines would attempt to pass the sea-gate in the opposite direction: hunter killers in search of the 30 or so Delta-class submarines lurking at the bottom of the Barents Sea ifrom where their missiles can reach U.S. targets); and Los Angeles-class submarines which would need to get quite close to the Kola peninsula to fire their cruise

THE MAIN Soviet peacetime interest in Svalbard is surveillance. The Russians like to know what everybody is up to. Few doubt, for example, that at least some of the six Aeroflot officials stationed at the Norwegian airport at Longyearbyen are spies. The Russians claim the sole functions of the officials is to handle the monthly Aeroflot flight from Murmansk (all air traffic between the Russian settlements on Svalbard and Murmansk passes through Longyearbyen airport).

Yet, according to a recent report in the "Neue Zurcher Zeltung." one of the Aeroflot officials last year was Alexei Gonchar, one of the 100 or so KGB agents expelled by the British Government in 1971. Furthermore the Aeroflot officials have a habit of photographing all arrivals at the air-

According to the Soviet consul at the main Russian settlement of Barentsburg, the five helicopters based there are needed to link Barentsburg with Longyearbyen airport and the other Russian settlement, and to support visiting Soviet scientific expeditions.

The Russian helicopters used on Svalbard are Miss, which have a range sufficient to reach the distant corners of this enormous, empty archipelago, which has a land area equal to that of Holland and Belgium Interestingly the Soviets use the military version of the Mis. which can carry 28 soldiers. Despite the Aeroflot markings, the distinctive round portholes of the military model and the rocket emplacements on both sides of the rear and of the fuselage are plain to see. Jan Grondahl, the Norwegian governor of Svalbard, is reluctant to consider the strategic implications of the Soviet base. He admits the Russians have never sought permission either to build or operate the base but he refuses to speculate about their motives. He is, in his own words, only "a simple policeman." Sir Peter Whitely, who earned himself a reputation for plain speaking in his NATO post, believes that "an attack on Svalbard is tantamount to an attack on any other parts of NATO territory and would be resisted." The seizure of Svalbard might conceivably be viewed as a cause of war, but there is little NATO could do in the short term to resist it. Because of the area's demilitarized status, Norway has no troops stationed there. The nearest Norwegian forces are some 750km, to the south. Heavily outnumbered by Soviet forces on the Kolz peninsula, it is hard to believe that Norwegian commanders would contemplate sending any significant numbers of troops across a sea dominated by the enemy. Alcoholism is increasingly blamed breakdowns and suicides and for its notorious industrial inefficiency. Poland may well be the next Communist country to follow the call earlier this year by the World Health Organization for drastic national measures to combat alcoholism.

A study published by WHO says half of all male admissions to psy-chiatric hospitals in Yugoslavia had "alcoholism" as the first diagnosis. Yugoslavia has now banned the advertizing of alcohol.

The nationally owned segment of Yugoslavia's catering industry last year reported a 25 per cent increase in the sale of alcohol. Its profit targets are likely to be affected by the ban, which is extended even to promotional T-shirts.

"An essential aspect of any country's response (to alcoholism)," the WHO study observes, "is the political determination to promote and to adhere to policies that are bound to be controversial and that will need to contend with powerful interest groups. Some policies to be of view will inevitably have (adverse) implications for the alcohol industry."

OPPOSITION to such national measures is apparent throughout Central and Eastern Europe, where all industries are under pressure to meet rigid production plans. An unusually frank article published by the Soviet newspaper "Komsomolskaya Pravda" recently explained that the personal bonuses of industrial managers depend on their meeting production or sales targets without regard to the social price of their success.

Hungary, too, has introduced total prohibition on the advertizing of alcoholic drinks, backed by curbs on licensing regulations and the closure of taverns near schools and places of work. The government has increased the price of drinks by 25 per cent and has prohibited their con-sumption in public places, such as Czechoslovakla and Bulgaria are introducing measures similar to the Hungarians', and Yugoslavia has formulated a long-range programme of which the advertizing ban on alcohol is only the first step.

Similar reforms are also expected shortly in Poland, where a parliamentary debate recently revealed that the nation's three million hard-core drinkers account for something like half the total alcohol consumption of the 34 million population. The Polish newspaper "Kultura" blames the alarming current rise of drinking among teenagers on in-adequate recreational facilities and on a lack of individual attention from teachers and even parents. (Observer Foreign News Service)

Resort town clash

TEL AVIV. - The second- and thirdplaced teams in the National League, Netanya Maccabi and Tel Aviv Shimshon, clash in the resort town this Saturday.

This will be Shimshon's second consecutive away game, having lost last week 1:2 in Kfar Sava. The Yemenite Quarter team will most likely be without their new centreforward Yehoshua Feigenbaum. who was given red-card marching orders last Saturday. His absence will certainly weaken the Shimshon attack, and though Gideon Damti and Yoel Massuari are in form, they will not be as effective without Peigenbaum's excellent distribution of the ball. Netanya Maccabi were somewhat unlucky not to beat Yehud Hapoel at this ground last week, having to be content with a 2:2 draw. The difference in positions of these clubs, with Hapoel top and Hakoah in 10th place, may not be a true reflec-tion of the talents of these sides. In fact, Hakoah have scored 11 league goals compared to Hapoel's 10 goals. Hakoah have been hard hit by in-juries of late and in last Saturday's 0:0 draw against Ramat Amidar. they played without five of their first team. If Giora Spiegel, Moshe Yehiel, Shaul Cohen and Rafi Salomon return to the team this week, Tel Aviv Hapoel may be in for Bnei Yehuda shook Petah Tikva with a 3:0 win last week and this victory will give a big boost to their fans. The station was originally planned as a regular, oil-firing unit. After the Yom Kippur War, plans were changed. "At that time, none of us knew how to deal with coal. It was something we knew from technical publications only," he said. It took Electric Corporation engineers over a year to learn, Arbel recalled with a smile. Not only about coal as a source of energy, but also its implications on people's lives and on the environment.

Arbel and his men supervised the construction of several breakwaters and a pier. Ships will anchor at the end of the pier and unload their cargo onto barges, which will bring the coal to shore. From there the coal will be moved on conveyor belts. "Air pollution will be kept at very low level, because we will keep the coal damp so that it can't be carried away by wind," Arbel said. Noise has also been taken care of. Every mechanism we suspected of being too noisy was equipped with silencers and specially wrapped, in order to keep the noise at tolerable

The first of the station's four units has been almost completed and the Electric Corporation hopes to have it working by early 1981. The rest will follow at ten-month intervals. The station will be the only one

An estimated 400-450 foreign nationals are currently employed in the country without work permits, says Baruch Haklai, head of the Labour Ministry's employment service. He adds that 250-300 of these are women from the Philippines or other countries in Southeast Asia, engaged as household help, cooks or nannies in the homes of the economic upper crust.

Gold soars $17

LONDON (Reuter). - The price of gold soared by more than $17 an ounce to be fixed at $411.20 on the important London Sullion market in hectic trading yesterday, which dealers compared with conditions before gold last fell below $400 six

The renewed interest in gold was partly a reflection of the weakness of the dollar, from which both investors and speculators switched away earlier this year in a movement that almost doubled the gold price,

There are currently 1,618 foreign nationals working in Israel with government permits, about a third of them on the Negev air bases construction projects. The permits are issued by the employment service on the specific requests of employers. The Interior Ministry then issues the worker with a B-1 visa, allowing temporary residence for one year. Haklai told The Jerusalem Post

Katz: Renewal's 35 jobs unfrozen By SHLOMO MAOZ

Post Economic Reporter

The 35 Project Renewal jobs frozen on Sunday afternoon on Finance Minister Yigael Hurvitz's demand, have been unfrozen, accor-ding to Labour and Social Affairs Minister Israel Katz.

Katz said he received a promise from Hurvitz on Tuesday that the jobs would be available and that the new jobs — some of an estimated 900 that Project Renewal will need could be filled today. Katz explained that Project

Renewal money comes from abroad, often with strings attached, so that it can only go to the massive rehabilitation project designed to improve living conditions in slum neighbourhoods.

Hurvitz' promise about the 25 tobe still doesn't mean the entire project, which was proposed by Prime Minister Menahem Begin two years ago, is still agreeable to the finance

Even though much of the billions of pounds slated for the project come from abroad, spending that money is inflationary, and Hurvitz has vowed to halt inflation as soon as possible.

The court found that meat products on sale had a bad smell and were rotten, and mincemeat had turned yellow. The head of the meat and fish department was also fined IL30,000.

The yield reflects the difference between the "theoretical" value of bonds — based on the date of Issue and current C-o-L indexes plus ac-cumulated interest — and the actual market price. It is based on the assumption that future C-o-L index increases will be zero. A negative yield indicates bonds sold at a premium, a positive figure bonds sold at a discount) (These prices are unofficial)

Religious pressures

MUTUAL TOLERANCE is obviously vital to the survival of democracy in a society as cleavable as Israel's. Yet in the relationship between the Orthodox and the non-Orthodox communities in this country, tolerance has on the whole been very much one-sided.

Long standing social pacts, many of them transmuted into law, have assured members of the Orthodox minority the fullest possible regard for their religious sensibilities. Thus they have been able to conduct their lives most of the time according to their own codes. Their communities and their schools were insulated against the unwanted intrusion of secularism.

Where mixed company was mandatory, as in the army, religious norms such as those of kashrut and Shabbat were adopted as obligatory for all. But special exemptions might still be provided for the Orthodox, and for them alone.

This so-called status quo has been treated by the Orthodox as untouchable — but only to the extent that their own guaranteed rights seemed to be threatened with violation. While the Halacha could not perhaps be made into state law in one fell swoop, there was no bar to its piecemeal application, even outside the status quo.

The argument of majority rule does not appear to have greatly impressed Orthodox politicians, except in a practical way. The moral standards of the non-Orthodox majority are simply immoral, wherever they depart from religious norms: and it is divinely ordained that they must, sooner or later, be changed.

Whether it is to be sooner or later is a decision that must, however, be made in reference to the general balance of political forces - as well as to the balance between 'moderates" and "extremists" within the Orthodox camp. But once made, the decision may be implemented by resort to ordinary majoritarian politicking, even of the more sordid kind. For some strange reason the nation is being made witness at this very time to a concentrated display of this strategy. Yesterday, in this space, The Jerusalem Post gave its endorsement to a bill regulating autopsies. The measure had been tabled by the Government to compensate the religious parties notably the NRP — for the defeat of the amendment, sponsored by Agudat Yisrael, to the Abortion Law. This in itself did not make the bill any less reasonable in its overall thrust.

The purpose of the bill was not, after all, to ban autopsies — a patent impossibility. It was only to subject them to the right of refusal by families of deceased persons. If Orthodox families made greater use of this right than others, it was their business. It now turns out, however, that the passage of the bill is not to be considered satisfaction enough.

Next Monday, the once-defeated abortion amendment — to strike out the "social clause" in the law - is to be tabled again. The hope is that this time the stray coalition sheep that voted against, or abstained, last time, will come back to the fold -- so as not to cause Agudat Yisrael to withdraw its support of the

The stratagem may yet work. But the pious sponsors of the bill, which is aimed mostly at non-Orthodox mothers of large families, may usefully ponder one likely result: rising pressure for abortion-on-demand, regardless of cause. The indications may already be seen elsewhere on this page.

The Orthodox offensive does not stop at a bortions, however. A long frozen private member's bill on the old vexatious issue of 'Who's a Jew'' has just been released from the Knesset Law Committee at the behest of its chairman, the NRP's David Glass may have his own reasons for initiating this move, for which he has been heard to predict a slim chance of success. If pushed through, though, it too may be more the result may be not to certify the Orthodox notion of Jewishness, but to raise afresh the demand for recognition of the Conservative and Reform brands of Judaism.

A kulturkampf, once started in earnest, may be hard to con-

French Jewry's courage

DEMOCRATIC countries which are not a party to the Middle East conflict try their best to adopt an impartial stand. France inclines to the Arab side.

The French were the first EEC country to let the PLO open an Information Office in their capital. This terrorist movement is now striving for recognition as a state-in-the-making. The way into Europe for them lies through Paris. Pressure is applied on the Quai d'Orsay for an official visit by their leader Yasser Arafat, together with all the pomp and circumstance accorded

At which point the French Jewish community blew up. This was a surprise to onlookers. Traditionally the Jews of France have been a shade timorous, apathetic towards Jewish causes, and assimilationist, even after the horrors that overtook them during World War II.

Then came the hagira from North Africa in the 1960s, as the French withdrew from their colonial possessions. Almost overnight the size of the Jewish community in France doubled. It is now the third biggest in the world Diaspora, after America and the Soviet Union. And its quality is transformed. The new spirit is proud, dynamic, Zionist. The Representative Council of French Jews (CRIF) has made a forthright declaration — to which all the Jewish organizations are a party — that should Arafat be officially received as a guest of the French government, a moral chasm ("un divorce moral") will open between the Jewish population and the country's ruling authorities.

A spokesman stated — outright and fearlessly — at a public meeting sponsored by the CRIF that the Jews have two loyalties, not one: a loyalty to France and a loyalty to Israel. This historic act of courage blows away old cobwebs. It places the Sephardim of France in a leadership position among the Jewish communities of the world.

President Giscard will no doubt give this outburst of feeling his serious attention. The message is that France should steer a middle course between the conflicting parties in the Middle East, rather than keep kowtowing to the Arab oil interests.

A process of peace-making is in train, backed by the U.S. government. It should be given a chance to succeed. If France and other countries accord any kind of recognition to Arafat at this stage, they will merely be setting back the prospects of accommodation.

IF THERE ARE women in Israel who wish to take to the barricades over the abortion issue, they should not confine themselves only to fighting for the preservation of the controversial Clause 5, which permits an abortion if continued pregnancy could cause the woman or her other children serious barm because of difficult family and social

The campaigners would do better to devote their energy and enthusiasm to striving for a review of the abortion legalization in

The new abortion law, which came into force at the beginning of 1978, retains the prohibition against abortion, making anyone performing an abortion liable to five years' imprisonment or a fine of IL50,000. It does, however, provide for several exceptions to this prohibition, including that contained in the controversial Clause 5.

Now it is a well-known fact that, despite the legal prohibition against abortion, thousands of abortions are performed quite openly in Israel each year, in clinics and hospitals, against payment.

The difference between Israel and other countries where abortion is illegal is that in Israel the authorities turn a blind eye to this blatant contravention of the law; and it is only in the rare case of death as a result of procurement of abortion that any against the medical personnel.

Campaigners for abortion should seek a review of the entire law, not just Clause 5, writes Post Law Editor DORIS LANKIN.

that practically every woman who wants an abortion can get one either by paying for it or by getting it free if she fits in to any of the many categories of exceptions specified in the law. But because abortion is still nominally illegal, the price for which it can be procured, without going through the convolutions of approval by a panel, is high. The doctors who perform these abortions - and their names are common knowledge -not only put a high price on their services but they also get this price tax-free. For it would be ridiculous to expect them to declare illegal earnings for income-tax purposes.

Because the law is being openly flouted, it is in the best interests of the democratic principle of rule of law to abrogate it and not leave it in the statute book to be observed only in the breach. Israel had a similar experience with the prohibition against the taking of key money for parent that this prohibition was being completely ignored by the population as a whole, the Knesset very properly got rid of it.

In addition to restoring respect and prestige to the institution of law and preventing it from becoming a laughing stock, the legislation of abortion would produce other beneficial effects: Once abortion is legal it could be obtained free of charge through the sick funds like any other operation. This would eliminate the soul-destroying and time-consuming process of appearing before medical panels. (I am told by the experienced that it is actually more difficult to get a free abortion since the new law was enacted than it was before there was any such law.) But, even more important. legalization would soon bring the sick funds to the conclusion that prevention is cheaper than cure, and planning chinics where contracep-tives could be obtained free and proper instruction given for their

Another beneficial effect would be the reduction in the price of abortions for those who prefer to go to private doctors. For the choice of doctors would obviously be much wider, and the fees would be normalized once the stigma of Illegality was removed.

Furthermore doctors would have no "excuse" for not declaring the fees obtained for abortions, just as they declare fees obtained for other operations, to the income tax;

THE MAIN OBJECTION to legalizing abortions would, of course, come from the leaders of the religious parties. Although this objection could be safety predicted, it is a little of to comprehend how it can be founded. For even it abortions were nextend. For even if abortions were made logal, he one would force any religious woman to procure an abortion. Freezy genuinely religious woman would be free then, as she is now, to decline the opportunity of an abortion. And the non-religious would continue to have abortions, as they do now, of their own free will.

The only difference would be that there yould not be a wholesale there would not be a wholesale flouting of the law. Without any claim to a knowledge of taimudic lore I am sure that there must be something somewhere, in the oral law laid down by our antient wise, and worldly rabbinical scholars, which says it is fer better to repeal a law than to tolerate consistent defiance of it.

As to the lear of the religious that legalization would encourage about tions, that is patently specious: Very few women elect to have an abortion except as a last, desperate res and if legalizing abortion has the. effect of placing greater emphasis on contraception as I believe it would (and there are methods of con-traception which even the religious are allowed to practice), then it would even have the effect of reducing the rate of abortions.

In any event, if there is to be a confrontation with the religious parties — and there already is a confrontation on Clause 5 — then it would be far better to go the whole hog and fight it out on the issue of abortion as such, instead of on a relatively minor

Sexist politics

The Post's MICHAL YUDELMAN argues that "once women are granted control over their reproduction, the main rationale for denying them other freedoms will have been eliminated."

cest - are all excellent reasons. But a woman's simple wish not to bear any more (or any) children is conspicuously absent from any of these Clause Five, or the social clause, widens the definition of "deserving" women to include those who have done their "duty" by bearing a certain number of children and who risk facing severe social circumstances in bearing more. The law is a product of a society that has always defined woman as a childbearer. Without the ability to limit their own reproduction, other "freedoms" are a mockery for women, for they cannot be exercised. Once women are granted control over their reproduction, however, the main rationale for denying them other freedoms will nave been eliminated.

Religious groups oppose the fifth clause mainly on the grounds of what they call "fetus murder." But if they really believed abortion was murder, how can they approve it in the other four clauses of the law?

Another argument is that the fifth clause must be eliminated for women's "own good." They claim that abortion panels fall to warn women of the many dangers abortion poses. In fact, the death rate from childbirth and complications of pregnancy is ten times as great as from clinically performed abortions. Still, it is the woman's choice to dangers of childbirth or take the safer course of abortion.

Finally, there is the argument that women don't really want abortions, but are pressured, even forced, to have them by the medical panels. This silly argument assumes that women are simply too feeble-minded to know what they really want. It is tion, which is the real issue.
